

After having been involved in the Mustang hobby for almost 18 years, I recently realized that I have become somewhat bored. I didn't mean for it to happen; it kinda sneaked up on me from behind.

When I first entered the hobby, everything was exciting -- the shows, the Mustang Club of America, and the fact that people knew so darn much about these cars!

Somewhere along the line however, I began to lose that enthusiasm which is so essential to happiness. I think perhaps my biggest mistake was letting my involvement with the Mustang Club of America turn into a job. During the years I've held numerous positions within the organization and therein lies a potential problem. It feels as if the fun-quotient has started to silently slip away.

However I have learned that enthusiasm is definitely contagious. And if you ever attend a board of directors meeting for Mustang Museum, Inc., you'll see what I mean.

I know some of the folks involved in this project and I had heard and read about the plans and goals. This has seemed like a great idea from the beginning, but could it possibly become a reality? Attending the January meeting held in Atlanta convinced me that all things are possible.

The folks who have organized this "Mustang Experience" movement have only one speed and that's full steam ahead! They are extremely serious about this project and are determined to make it happen.

The amount of energy and enthusiasm present in that meeting room was phenomenal. Complex matters were dealt with quickly and efficiently. Discussions were orderly and productive. Reasonable time-tables were established with individuals willingly accepting whatever assignment was necessary to meet that time-table. There was no "I" mentality; it was all "we".

After the meeting adjourned I realized that I was downright excited about this venture. This has the potential to be the best automotive facility in the nation. But even though the Mustang Museum Committee is a group of hard-working business people, they need our support to help ensure the success of this monumental task.

Check out the News & Notes section in this issue for an abbreviated schedule of Committee meetings, and make plans to attend one.

If you haven't purchased your "I Support Mustang Museum" decal, do so. If your club hasn't made a donation yet, find a way to generate the funds to do so.

We are the lucky ones who have been handed this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. Step up and enjoy a new breed of Mustang excitement.
